

THE PROFITABILITY OF A PADEL COURT

The difference in running a tennis court and a padel court is very important.

In tennis, 90% of the matches are played in singles. In the padel, on the other hand, 90% of the games are played in doubles. This of course means that the recipes on a padel court are twice as high as on a tennis court.

Moreover, one can place an average of two padel courts on a tennis court. A short calculation then shows that the yield per area doubles again. Two padel courts instead of a tennis court brings four times more profit.

The fact that the padel is played on a half-closed course by the glass walls and the fence makes this sport less dependent on the weather than tennis.

The ground is made of artificial grass filled with sand that absorbs rain, even if it is bad in the fall or spring, you can always play a padel game. The padel season is longer than the outdoor tennis season. In practice, the padel is played throughout the year.

Moreover, the padel attracts a new audience. In other words, the tennis club that invests in one or more padel courts will be well inspired. The experience of the tennis clubs that have made the leap teaches us that about half of the padel players were not yet members of the club.

In practice there will be a mix between club players and external players, and the income generated by a padel court will vary between 25,000 and 40,000 pounds per year.

The installation of one or more padel courts must therefore be considered as an investment. Profitability is assured from the first day.
